CATHODIC PROTECTION SYSTEM DESIGN.ppt

Cathodic protection has also been applied to steel embedded in concrete, to copper-based alloys in water systems, and, exceptionally, to lead-sheathed cables and to aluminium alloys, where cathodic potentials have to be very carefully controlled.

cathodic protection in practise

5.0 cathodic protection current demand The cathodic protection current demand is the amount of electricity required to polarize the structure to a level that meets the criteria described in Section 4.

CATHODIC PROTECTION DESIGN - USNA

However, metallised zinc cathodic protection systems can be, and are in many instances, operated in impressed current mode. In impressed current cathodic protection systems, the anode is made of material with an unpolarised potential that may be equal, higher or greater than that present initially in the steel to be protected.

Cathodic Protection of Steel in Concrete | Applications

the most common material used in construction. The cathodic protection of reinforcing carbon steel in reinforced concrete structures can be applied in a similar manner. Cathodic protection can be achieved in two ways: - by the use of galvanic (sacrificial) anodes, or - by impressed current.

cathodic protection - National Physical Laboratory

In order to evaluate potential and current criteria for the cathodic protection of bare low-carbon steel in a high-resistivity environment, specimens were exposed in the laboratory for a period of two months to a soil having a resistivity of about 20,000 ohm-centimeter.

as "cathodic polarization". 1.1.2 For galvanic anode CP systems, the anode of the electrochemical cell is a casting of an electrochemically active alloy (normally aluminium, zinc or magnesium based). This anode is also the current source for the CP system and will be consumed.

DNV-RP-B401: Cathodic Protection Design

This article summarises the international development of cathodic protection of steel in concrete. The technology was developed in Europe and the USA for applications to buried prestressed concrete water pipelines (Refs. 1 & 2) and in California to deal with deicing salt attack of reinforced ...

Corrosion Protection of Steel Bridges

For effective cathodic protection, the potential of the steel surface is polarized (pushed) more negative until the surface has a uniform potential. At that stage, the driving force for the corrosion reaction with the protected surface is removed.
