The different extended-release drug formulations (vide infra) are designed based on the route of administration for which they are developed, but also on the physicochemical, pharmacokinetic and pharmacodynamic properties of the drug. For example, opioids with short half-life such as morphine, oxycodone or hydromorphone are excellent candidates for administration via controlled-release ...

In the design of experiments, two or more "treatments" are applied to estimate the difference between the mean responses for the treatments. For example, an experiment on baking bread could estimate the difference in the responses associated with quantitative variables, such as the ratio of water to flour, and with qualitative variables, such as strains of yeast.
